

Station 10 – Palace Street

Müller and Gerber used the water of the Heimbach, in whose valley cut several mills, flour mills, sawmills, as well as oil mills, tanneries and dammed up fish ponds, were located.

In the old medieval suburb, today's palace street, located beyond the city wall, concentrated commerce and industry. To that time, it was the only access road to the Sickinger height.

The pond street, nowadays an important arterial road, didn't have any importance to that time. It was still a path, but today it reminds with its name of the pond landscape then.
